Open contest for any kind of robot-oriented works

1. Contest description

"Free Style" contest is open to all creative people and their robot-oriented works. There is no limitation on what the work should concern on or what robot should do (it may even do nothing), except that common safety must be maintained at all times. It may be physical as well as virtual. It may be static as well as moving and highly dynamic. There may be a highly advanced super-powered robot as well as robotic poem presented ... All works will be evaluated by a jury / referees.

2. Way of conduct

The teams will be assigned a place where to display their work. During the whole event, someone has to be available on that place at all times for the public and the jury to describe them the work and answer questions.

The teams will bring a poster of A1-A0 size describing the work and the team. This poster will be on display for the whole event duration.

Secondly, the teams will provide this poster and at least 2 photographs/images and 2 paragraphs of text describing the work in electronic form for publishing purposes prior arrival to the competition (via the registration application). In case the poster is manually drawn or otherwise "non-computer made", the team will submit a photograph of this poster.

3. Limitations

The robot and the work must not be dangerous or excessively annoying.

Because being part of Robotic Day, the works must somehow relate to robotics. Otherwise, the topic is fully up to you. For the registration, a short description will be required. These descriptions will be used for pre-approval of the works to be sure they fit in the Robotic Day scheme.

For operational and security reasons, big and heavy works may register only after approval by the organizers.

4. Power of officials and liability

No objections against the decisions of the referee or the organizers are allowed.

The organizers may change the rules without prior notice, e.g. based on number of participants, local conditions etc. The organizers also reserve the right to close the registrations before the official deadline or to cancel any work registration. In such case, there will be no potential expenses recovered.

The participants are responsible for their work and their safety and will be liable for all damages caused by them, their work or their equipment.

The organizers will not be under any circumstances held liable or responsible for any accidents of the participants or any damages caused by the participants, their work or their equipment. The organisers hold no responsibility for theft or damage of participants' work.
